

Each person is a part of the whole. Like the many varied colors of a kaleidoscope, each teacher, each student is different. His appearance, his beliefs, his life aims are highly individual, never to be entirely duplicated—this is the way we were created. Yet, put these pieces of personality together, and the whole person emerges as a unit which becomes a vital part of a school.

When students and teachers arrive at the campus in the early morning mist, they unite in an ultimate purpose. They come here to learn of others... to learn about themselves. Sharing wisdom, friendship, and love, they seek the knowledge of life.
