Constructive Changes Sought

Computer scheduling, appointment of department chairpersons, and division and reconstruction of classrooms were some of the important administrative changes made this year on the WHS campus. At CHS the schedule was changed to comply with state regulations.

Money and time were important factors in Walterboro High principal's, Mack D. Jones, decision to use computer programming to schedule students for their classes. Using the computer program for the first time produced several unforeseen problems. Nonetheless, it proved to be a successful project. Most of the problems arose from students choosing two or three classes that met during the same period. Adjustments were made and plans were drawn up to give students information that stated which courses conflicted.

The Southern Association evaluation in the spring forced the various academic departments to meet. Each department was required to prepare a report for the visiting committee. This process brought into focus the need for department meetings and a chairperson to direct the department's activities. Mr. Jones appointed these chairpersons and provided them with an additional free period to carry out their administrative duties.

With a big boom in the student population at WHS additional classroom space was needed. By dividing the old double study hall with a partition, the additional classroom was created. Mr. Jones decided to use the student council room as a classroom too. The chorus room was used during homeroom period. After all these changes there were still not enough rooms for all the teachers. Mr. Dreyer, Miss Blue and Mr. McMillan did not have rooms of their own and floated from classroom to classroom.

Mr. Dowdy, principal of the Colleton campus changed the schedule of the ninth and tenth graders to comply with state regulations. This meant a shorter lunch period and fewer breaks during the day.
