

Clapping and jammin' Patricia Martin and Tammy Doctor know the weekend is almost here.

“If you ain't for the Bulldogs you ain't from”

“If you ain't for the Bulldogs you ain't from . . .” roars the student body, the cheer reverberating off the rafters. Their bodies move together in a methodical rhythm as the gym vibrates to the intensity of the beat. The Juniors and Seniors compete for the spirit stick, each trying to outdo the other. But still they are as one encouraging the Dogs to victory.

How do you feel at a pep rally? “I feel like I'm on a high!” explains Karen Chaplin, a modest smile brightening her face.

Marina Scott talking with her hands says, “I want to get into the rhythm of everyone else.” While Deni Godley laughs, “I want to yell and scream and jump and cheer and clap and dance and just be myself!” Which is what everyone else in the building is doing.

A pep rally at Walterboro High is surely an event to remember, the feeling of amity, the spirit of devotion, and the smell of victory seems to bind the students together like the links of a chain. S.S.
