

Along with fun, the snow brings danger to the inexperienced drivers of the low country.

Despite their lack of expertise in matters of "snow frolic," students did the best they could with what they had learned from northern friends, books and television.

Joan Johnson attempted to make a snow angel on a friend's porch with minimal success. Joan said of the experience, "It made me feel like a little girl again." Michael Scarborough and Wallace Guilford had a full scale snowball fight. But as Wallace said, "We didn't really have enough snow for a quality fight, so we took a washtub and collected the stuff off cars around the neighborhood."

With this hands-on experience under their belts, students were confident that the next time the unusual phenomenon occurred, they would be prepared for all the fun to be derived from it.

For Jana Murdaugh, Kimberly McNeil, Kimberly Donaldson, Pamela Hand, and Anna Thomas a snow shower is an experience well worth celebrating.
