

Juniors Prepare For Prom

MRS. LEWIS' FOOD CLASS members display their culinary creation.

ONE OF THE SCENES was a portrayal of "Rue de la Paris," the name of a street in Paris. It featured light posts, hanging baskets of flowers, and plants.

MODELING THE EDITIONS of the 1985-86 prom fashions were Ricky Kinard, Felicia Martin, Morgan Cleland, Ann Frasier, Delma Dennis, and Lynn Boles. The tuxedos were compliments of Gingiss in the Northwoods Mall.

Lavish gowns and gallant tuxedos marked the beginning of the fashion shows held in the mini-auditorium. The fashion shows were among several of the preparations for the prom. "The purpose of the fashion shows," said Mrs. Leila Williams, the sponsor, "was to give the guys an idea as to what styles of tuxedos were available and to give the girls an idea as to what was expected of them. I was pleased with the success of the fashion shows because the auditorium was packed during both lunches and the kids were very receptive."

The delicacies were prepared by the Basic Consumer and Homemaking classes, under the guidance of the instructor, Mrs. Carolyn Lewis. Mrs. Lewis stated, "The refreshments were an assignment for all of my classes and I think they did an excellent job."

Tonya Haynes, the president of the junior class said, "The prom was a big success because so many teachers and students took timeout of their busy schedules to render their help in preparing for the prom."

Mrs. Skelton, the prom advisor, said she was very pleased with prom "86". "The prom," stated Mrs. Skelton, "was highly organized. It had a different type of effect than last year's and more participation."

A special thanks went to the advisors, the art classes, the shop classes, the Home Economic classes, and to all teachers who helped in the preparations.
