

A Variety of Projects

Whether in English class or physics, students found themselves doing a variety of projects throughout the year.

In Mrs. Janis Blocker's and Mrs. Kate George's English classes, students had to produce original presentations. Students could use anything within arm's reach. Many came to school in costumes, and others videotaped their skit and then showed it to the class.

"It was a wonderful, learning experience. I had lots of fun," said senior Lauren Whetsell, a student in Mrs. George's English IV class.

In Spanish classes, students were given a unique assignment: make the flag of any Spanish-speaking country.

Some students drew the flag on cardboard while some of the more industrious ones sewed their flags.

"It took a lot of effort," replied senior Jonathan Songer. "Sewing the flag was not the easiest task in the world but when I messed up the sewing machine, my mom took over, and the task became much simpler."

Many other projects were done during the year. One of these was "mom for a day." Students were given baby dolls and were told to be their mother for the day. Many students also did extra credit projects for Mrs. Mary Ann Byrd's government classes.

— Marc Stroble

"I enjoyed babysitting and found it to be a great experience."

*Elvis Black
Sophomore*

Mrs. Ruth Allgood teaches the Roaring Twenties in a 1920 flapper outfit. A "flapper" was a young woman who deviated from the conventional styles of the day. Mrs. Allgood taught psychology and AP U.S. History.