Driving or Crying

Students pour out of the building at the 3:10 dismissal bell. Many students had their cars "bulldogged" during the year when they parked in the teachers' parking lot.

One dilemma facing students was how to get to school and back home. They could drive, catch a ride with someone else, or ride the bus.

The traffic making the mass exodus at 3:10 evidenced the number of cars driven to school. The buses being parked at the high school added to the traffic. Most students believed the traffic jam was worth it.

"I think the privilege and pleasure of driving to school outweighed the traffic problem," said Pam Elliot.

An important accomplishment for students was getting their driver's license. Many students were so anxious that they went to the highway department on the morning of their fifteenth birthday.

"Driving is a freedom I have been looking forward to for a long time," said April Arrington.

Many students could not drive to school either because they could not get the car or could not drive yet. Although many rode the buses, most dreaded the long ride. Riding the bus on hot spring days was not something most students relished.

"The worst thing about riding the bus is that it takes so long to get home. I wish I could leave school and be home in a few minutes," said Jennifer Strickland.
