

All In A Day's Work

Administrators were extremely busy throughout the year. Often, their contributions to the school were overlooked.

Administrators' duties varied. All administrators not only disciplined students, but they also worked with students in extra-curricular activities.

Mr. Frank Barnhill sponsored the Student Council. He and the class officers worked on projects that affected the student body. The officers respected his opinions because of his long-time sponsorship of Student Council.

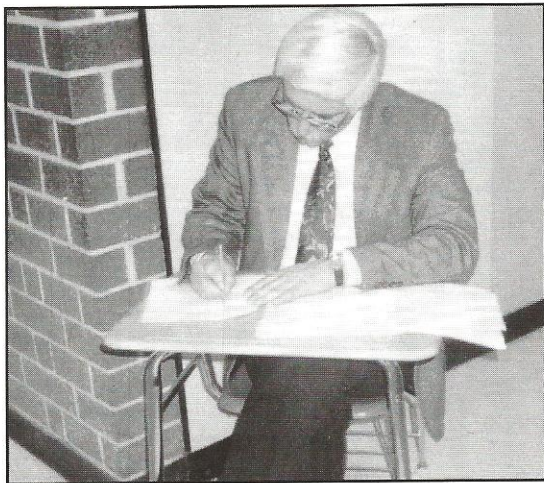

Mrs. Helen Bodison's daily agenda included approving or rejecting students' absences. Probably the strangest assignment she had was to supervise the flower deliveries on Valentine's Day. More than 200 arrangements were received and delivered during lunch and after school.

"This year I came prepared," said Mrs. Bodison. "On Valentine's Day, I wore casual clothes and comfortable shoes."

Mr. Arliss Jarvis oversaw the maintenance of the school and supervised a staff of eight. A building with more than 100 classrooms constantly needed fluorescent bulbs replaced, floors mopped, and restrooms cleaned. The staff also had to undergo training to learn how to handle and dispose contaminants according to DHEC regulations.

Mr. Harry Jenkins worked primarily with disciplinary problems. On the first floor in his office, teachers referred students to him for tardies, chewing gum, disrespect, and rude behavior.

After observing Mrs. Cathy Turner's English class, Mr. Pence sits outside the classroom to fill out an evaluation form. Every year one-third of the faculty gets evaluated.

Mrs. Helen Bodison reads over the list of students who have received flowers. Mrs. Bodison worked in the mini-auditorium on Valentine's Day distributing over 200 flower arrangements.
