

GETTING ALL DRESSED

UP W

What did corduroy jumpers and dresses, wide-legged jeans, hockey jerseys, and funky shoes all have in common? These attires were seen on many students around school.

"Your clothes and unique style describes the kind of person you are," said senior Shakeya Washington. "When shopping, it shouldn't always be about how much it costs but the way you put it together."

Fashions come and go, and many fashions from the past return. They just have a new funky twist.

"Different fashions and styles reflect what people are like and who they hang around," said senior Damon Ford.

With the changing of the dress code, people had a little more freedom to express their personality with their style.

"I personally enjoy shopping," said senior Shanna Cobb. "I feel that various styles display many different personalities."

Our school had many different styles: Because of the diversity in students, the styles were varied. Shopping for the latest style was not as easy as it seemed.

"I think the styles are really neat this year," said senior April Rhode. "Some students dress to impress while some dress for comfort. I'm kind of in the middle."

Because Walterboro had a limited number of places to shop, there was always a short drive to Charleston. There, the coolest, up-to-date styles could be found.

"Shopping for me is always an adventure," said sophomore Laquita Belamy. "I don't stop until I find just the right outfit."

— Ericka Tedder

Seniors Shawn Roberts, Elvis Daniels, and Antonio Huggins sports tuxes at the prom fashion show. These fashions were great prom ideas.

