

Seniors Erica Maloney, K.C. Stone, and Trish Sapp, junior Ashley Heaton, and sophomore Morgan Walker ride on the student council float in the Martin Luther King, Jr. Day parade. The five were all very active members in council.

Senior Trish Sapp works at the computer during the blood drive entering donators' names, addresses, and other vital information on their registration forms. Trish was a homeroom representative in student council.

Just Trying to Help Out

"No rest for the weary," was possibly the best cliché to use when describing student council. The group was kept on its toes with its busy year. Council meetings were held the first Tuesday of the every month in the mini-auditorium. In this room council members made their plans for the year.

For the first time in several years, council rode in one of the city's parades. Nine members gathered for the Martin Luther King, Jr. parade. Other community events included the annual blood drive and a dance with the group co-sponsored with the National Honor Society. The proceeds from the dance went to the Walterboro homeless shelter.

"The blood drive is always a great way to get students involved in the community," said senior Jamone Blake.

Freshman Dionne Smalls, and juniors Lauren Ulmer, Ashley Heaton, Robin Bullock, and Leah Steele attended the state convention along with Ms. Sallie Searson. The group had the opportunity to meet Grace Corrigan, the mother of Christa McAuliffe, who died in the 1986

Challenger explosion was a guest speaker at the event.

To fund their endeavors, council held several candy sales. They also used some of their funds to subsidize the cost of navy pullovers for council members to purchase. Members who purchased pullovers wore them at council-sponsored events.

— Jennifer Babilon

"We've had a very productive year," said student body president Erica Maloney.

Almost ready to give his precious blood, senior Joseph Henderson lies still awaiting the inevitable needle. The blood drive gave many students and teachers an opportunity to help their community.

Freshman Dionne Smalls and juniors Lauren Ulmer, Ashley Heaton, Robin Bullock, and Leah Steele and Ms. Sallie Searson pose for a picture with Grace Corrigan, mother of Challenger astronaut Christa McAuliffe, at the State Convention. The girls enjoyed the weekend at Riverside High School in Greer, South Carolina.