

“What a nerd!” “Look at those rednecks and preps over there!” “Gosh, he seems to have the perfect life!” “It’s obvious that he didn’t have any upbringing!” “She’s so lucky!” “I don’t see how that dumb jock graduated from kindergarten!”

No matter who you were, at some point someone stereotyped you, and you stereotyped another. You were told again and again not to judge a book by its cover, but it was human nature to do it.

Often these stereotypes were inaccurate and sometimes even limiting. The consequence of a misjudgment could have been anything from failing to understand other walks of life to missing out on a possible life-long friendship. Students who you thought were

1 The thinker. Taking a break after running in a cross-country meet, sophomore Jesse Smith thinks about his run.

2 Did You Know That? Following the band’s half-time performance, freshmen Donovan Beeson and Elizabeth Laney take time to chat.

3 Get Up and Dance. Showing their stuff on Era Day, senior Conrad Gooding and junior Kent Whetsell dance to hippie music playing in the Commons.

4 Got a Quarter? Waiting in line to get sodas after school, freshmen Justin Pearce and Cameron Brown ask a friend for spare change.

5 Whistle While You Work. Sophomore Deanna Brown and junior Shantell Holmes soak reeds for basket weaving. The crafts class made twined, woven, and pinestraw baskets.

6 Eeny Meeny Miney Mo. On Era Day during Spirit Week, junior Ericka Tedder decides which CD to play next. Ericka served as one of the DJs during lunch.

7 Indian Outlaws. Juniors Denny Fishburne, Justin Pearce, and Cutler Hamilton act like Indians in Mrs. O’Briant’s Spanish II class to celebrate Thanksgiving.
