

Get Down and Dirty with Art

Art was one of the classes that allowed students to get dirty and express themselves through hands-on activities.

A visit to Room 213 or Room 258 provided an instight into a world of vibrant colors and breathtaking designs. These works came from the innovative minds of students of Mrs. Marilyn Zeilke and Mrs. Julia Waddell.

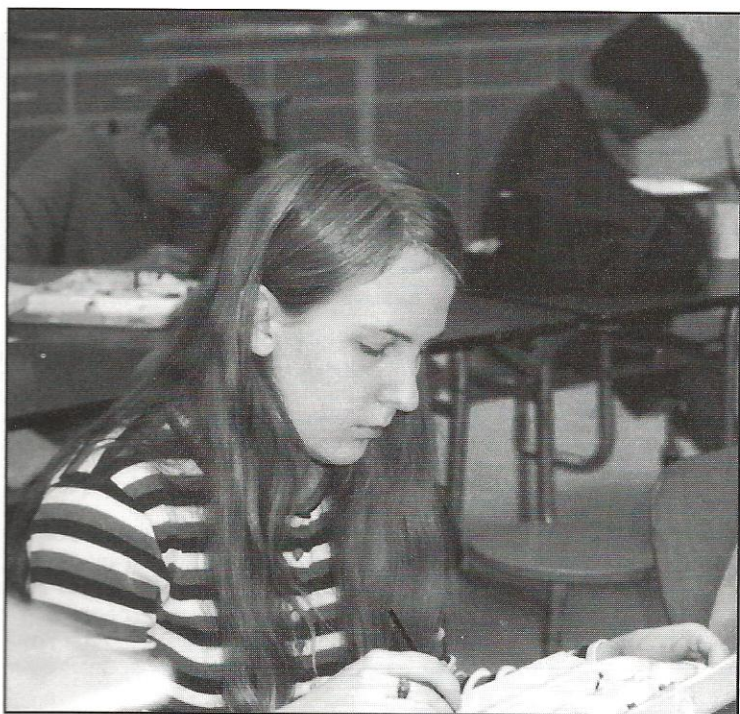

"Mrs. Waddell is a very fun teacher," said Grace Cunningham, Video Tech I student. The art teachers attempted to provide new and exciting problems for their classes. One hands-on activity was the murals made by the Design Class for the Downtown Halloween Carnival.

"Whatever attitude I have comes through in my project," stated Design student John Street. Art often served as a way to express feelings or relieve stress.

A student did not have to be able to draw an take an art class. He could choose from many options such as clay sculpting, 3-d drawing, and basket weaving.

"Art is very restricting," said senior Terance Crosby. It required descipline and intense concentration. Art III and Art IV gave students advanced much like coursework at the college level.

Just the Right Mix. Using only the primary colors (red, yellow, and blue), Lola Gentry mixes all the colors necessary for her painting.

Over, Under, Over, Under. Sophomore Bekkie Rembert and Angelica Knapp weave their baskets for crafts class. Students took one nine weeks of crafts and one of design.

Art lets students be creavtive.

SPOTLIGHT

Jennifer Worden had been hanging out in the art room since her first art class in 1993. According to Mrs. Zielke, Jennifer knew everything there is to know about supplies, storage space, and where to find things in the art room. Jennifer had taken Art I-IV as well as crafts and design. She had also been a teacher helper for the last two years.
