

Halloween Ho-Down. Junior NHS members Jenny Burke, Jessica Humphries, and Justin Shearer prepare for the downtown Halloween Carnival. Aside from volunteering their time through the NHS, all three were members of the band.

Ring Leader. At Open House, junior Jami Fennell looks at the Josten's selection of class rings. To follow tradition, most students bought their class rings at the beginning of their junior year.

Just as a business could not thrive without customers, the school could not function without your time and dedication. Working hard throughout the year, many of you received recognition for various achievements. Senior Margaret Young's outstanding PSAT scores earned her the coveted honor of being named a National Merit Finalist. Sophomore Denise Strickland was accepted to the South Carolina governor's School for Science and Mathematics for her junior and senior years, while sophomore Wynonna Haynes and freshman Amanda Morrissey were chosen as students in the summer session of the Governor's School for the Arts. Earning at least 1100 on the SAT, five freshmen Donovan Beeson, Holly Benton, Thomas McDaniel, Dorothy McDowell, and Leah Ellen Spangler had their names added to the SAT 1100+ Club plaque in the hallway. Even when your hard work did not earn recognition, you learned not to hide your talents.
