

WHERE'S THE SPIRIT?

Students express themselves during Spirit Week.

Spirit Week is a time to show how much school spirit the student body really has. It was held the week of the Homecoming Football Game.

"Nobody does anything! Our school has no spirit!" exclaimed Gini Brush. Walking down the hall September 15-19, one would have never known it was Spirit Week at Waterboro High School.

The week began with College Day, a day to show off your favorite college's attire. On Tuesday, students wore clothes that were tacky to honor Mismatch Day. Mourning the removal of dress code rights, students dressed totally in black on Wednesday in observance of Black Day. The most participation came on Thursday, Era Day. Students dressed up in clothes from different generations. Blue and White Day ended the week.

Spirit week is always fun, especially when the faculty dresses up too.

Morgan Hanel

Man in Black. Senior James Williams poses for a Retro Day picture. James was known for his good-natured humor around campus.

Amy Hefner stated, "I enjoyed dressing up! Why didn't more people?"

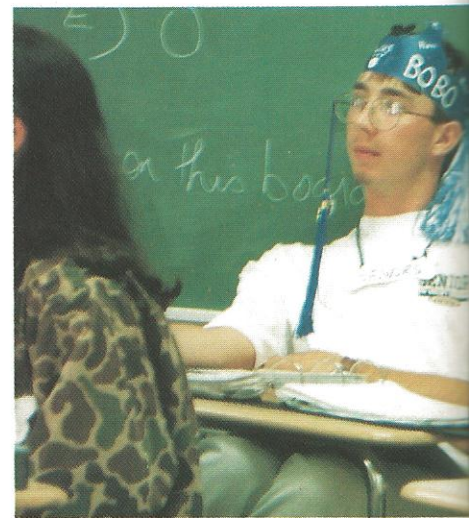

"It's cool. It gives us something to do," Dewey Lyons said.

Although some enjoyed it, many people believed it would have been better if more creative days had been assigned. With a stricter dress code this year, dressing up was hard to do because all clothing had to meet the dress code requirements.

Students had their own ideas of what could be done to improve Spirit Week for next year. Brandon Craven said, "An old day would be awesome where students dressed as it was before the new dress code."

Whether students dressed up or not, most people agreed that it was fun having something to anticipate.

-Elly Sanders

Coloring the classroom. Senior Justin Shearer listens intently to his class lecture while sporting all kinds of senior-spirit paraphenalia. Justin was one of the many seniors that participated in Spirit Week.