

AT LEAST IT RUNS!

The good, the bad, and the ugly.

Cars and trucks were the pride and joy of many students. Even if one's mode of transportation wasn't the most stylish, something was definitely better than nothing.

Because of the passing of the new law, freshmen would not have the freedom that many other high school students took for granted. It mandated that students could receive a driver's permit at fifteen and a restricted license at sixteen. Not until seventeen could students drive by themselves.

"Luckily, because of my March birthday, the new law doesn't affect me," commented freshman Sophia Barnes.

One of the downsides of having a car were the expenses and responsibility that came along with it. Some students were constantly finding themselves stranded on the side of the road or praying their parents wouldn't find out about the ticket the cop just wrote.

Wrecking a car not only cost money but also left students "car-less."

"I wrecked my car right before we got out of school, so I had to start my Being without a car for two weeks almost killed me because I was forced to ride with my mother. I never knew how much I would miss that piece of junk I once drove.

*-Wynona
Haynes
Sr.*

summer off without a car," said Thomas McDaniel.

Some students felt a need for speed. This feeling was quickly forgotten after receiving traffic tickets.

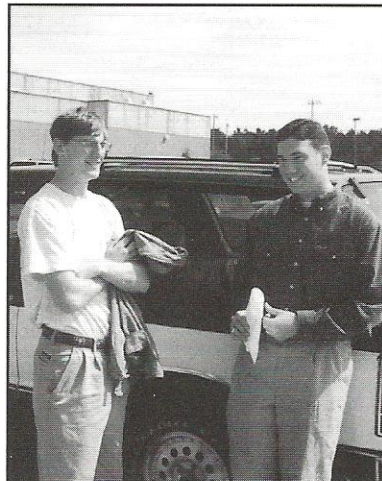

"As great as it is to have your parents buy you a car, it is also a constant restriction method," Amanda Wertz commented. "I don't want my parents to buy me a car because then they can take it away whenever they need to."

The student parking lot was filled with different varieties of cars and trucks that distinguished between the various personalities of the students.

Many students learned that it is not the way a car looks but whether or not it can get you from Point A to Point B.

-Rusty Creech and Ellyn Sanders

Just wastin' time. Seniors Kent Whetsell and Chris Collins stop to talk before leaving for work study. Both of the friends played on the football team.

Hit the road, Jack! Anxious to leave school, sophomores Jessica Mears and Erin Hall hop into their car, ready to go. Both girls played on the girls' soccer team.