

GETTING INVOLVED

HELPING THE COMMUNITY WHEN THEY NEED SERVICE

It's all about everybody else, about being unselfish with your time.

"The purpose of NHS is to get involved with the community," senior Amy Hefner said.

"I feel proud to be in the society because being a member says good things about me to a college, and it looks good on applications," stated senior Erin Davis.

"I'm really honored to be in NHS. It got me involved with volunteer work in the community," replied junior Richard Baldwin.

"I have learned to work with my community and other NHS members at WHS. It was an honor to be a part of such a positive group," replied junior LaToya Fryar.

"I like volunteering and helping people in the community, although sometimes NHS interferes with my tennis and soccer schedule," replied senior Jessica Eppinette.

Most NHS members, like senior Dixie Hoerl, think their experience in community activities will help in the future. "I will be recognized for my high honors. I have received my initiation certificate and also personal satisfaction for being in NHS."

NHS promoted leadership, stimulated a desire for scholarships, developed character in students, and rendered service all over the community.

NHS projects included tutoring students, working at the downtown Halloween Carnival, purchasing Christmas gifts for needy children, walking and raising money for Relay for Life and March of Dimes, and being Marshals and Ushers during the graduation ceremony.

Standing proud. The NHS members recite the NHS pledge at the induction ceremony. Mrs. Murdaugh stated, "It's impressive to see the young people light their candles symbolizing the lamp of knowledge to shine as an example to other students in the school."

I think I can. Senior Melissa Nettles conducts the Band of Blue at a football game. She was the vice-president of NHS and a Student Council member. Her goals included becoming a secondary-school teacher and going to college.
