

Duncan Hunt
 James Inabinett
 Icey Isacc
 Latasha Jackson
 Deana Johns
 Ivey Johnson

Carey Jones
 Debra Jones
 Hope Jones
 Shea Jones
 Ty Kelly
 Jessica Kenz-Hazard

Chillin'. Juniors Jesse Smith and Patrick Ward and freshman Eric Mock share a few jokes while at a weekend party. Parties were a chance for friends to socialize and have a good time.

Dancin' the Night Away. Unaware of the passing time, "Party Animal", Nick Drew performs one of his hilarious, famous dances at a party. Nick could always be found making someone laugh.

JUST IN TIME Or Maybe Not!

Curfews were a downside to weekend fun, but a few juniors found that they could get away with strolling through the door a few minutes, or even a few hours late if they had a sufficient excuse.

Nick Drew commented he is routinely late for his 12:00 curfew. Known by some as the "Party Animal," Nick admitted that it was easy to lose track of time at parties while dancing and joking with friends. "I usually use the good old 'Car Trouble' excuse, but it's starting to get old," remarked Nick.

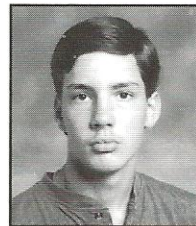

Leslie Thomas said the "Huddle House" excuse usually gets her off the hook. "But Mom, we were really hungry," she mimicked.

While most juniors are long-time veterans of curfew-breaking, a few are content with their parents' rulings.

"By 12:00 things start to die down anyway, so I am usually home on time, but if I am late, I'll say I was last to be dropped off in a car pool," explained Alice Bickley.

As every teenager will agree, rules are made for one reason...to be broken. Most W.H.S juniors, whether breaking the rules or following them, enjoyed their free time.

-Amanda Morrissey

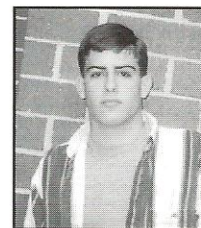

"When I come in the house late, I say that I had to be someone's designated driver, which is usually true anyway."

-Justin Thomas

"I don't have a curfew, but if I did, I'd say my boyfriend and I went to McDonald's and it was packed."

-Shaka Southall

"If I am late getting home, I usually tell my parents I got bogged down somewhere and we had to wait on a four-wheel-drive."

-Jason Driggers