

walk a mile in someone else's shoes

shoe city

Nothing else will do. A lot of people chose to wear Timberlands. Keith Aiken preferred to wear this brand every chance he had.

With so many different styles of footwear these days, how could students choose what shoes they to wear?

"When it comes time to put the boot to somebody it's got to be Timberlands because anything else would be uncivilized," said senior Keith Aiken. Keith feels strongly about his choice of footwear.

Shoes came in all different kinds of colors and types. Some chose shoes for their comfort. WHS students wore many different brands of shoes. Keeping up with the styles, teens looked at their peers in an effort to decide on what brand to wear. NIKE, FUBU, Adidas, Candies, Timberlands, New Balance, Sketchers, Puma, and Mudd, were just a few of the many brands.

Outfits made an impact on why students bought the footwear they did. Some students may have bought a pair of shoes just for one outfit.

"I think shoes make the outfit. With out the right shoes the outfit just does not look right," says sophomore Jared Frasier.

While looking for the right shoe, students had to make sure they stayed away from flip-flops, for safety reasons. Flip-flops offered no protection to the upper part of the foot, and in case of an emergency the shoes would slow the student down causing others to be held up as well. "We should have the option to wear what we want to wear. Heels and open toe shoes bring out femininity in women," said freshman Whitney Anderson, who has over 70 pairs of shoes!

Searching for the right shoes baffled even the most fashion conscious people. People found their own ways to pick the shoes including their on personal style, looking at their peers, and the outfits they wore. Being surrounded by many different types of shoes made it nearly impossible for students. Hunting for the right footwear will always remain a challenge due to the constant changing of styles.

-Kara Fox

