

Catchin' some zzz's. Using her jacket as a pillow, junior Laura Gorski snoozes through her first period psychology class. "I time her daily to see how long it takes her to fall asleep after the bell rings. The most time it has taken her is three minutes. Either I'm really boring, or she just doesn't sleep enough at night," said Mr. Hayes. Towards the end of the year, Laura started bringing a pillow with her so she would be more comfortable.

Coach Potato. Chilling out on the couch, senior Lance Anderson often spends fourth period in the guidance conference room. Lance enjoyed being a guidance helper, especially on the days when there was nothing to do. "I need a nap everyday because I work SO hard in all my classes," said Lance. "People always disturb me, but I'm getting pretty good at ignoring them." When Lance was not sleeping, he was wandering around the halls.

Is this class over yet? Propping her head up, senior Shera Brown tries not to fall asleep. "I would rather spend my waking hours out with my friends. I sleep during school so that I'm well-rested in the afternoons and evenings. I don't want to miss out on anything important going on after school," said Shera. "But since it is my senior year, I've been trying harder to stay awake and get my work done."

All stretched out. Taking up all the counter space, junior Charlie Hoffman makes himself comfortable during a meeting at the beginning of his fourth period journalism class. Charlie's nap did not last long because he had to get busy doing the ad section of the yearbook. "Even though it stresses me out, journalism is my favorite class because I'm an editor, and I get to tell other people what to do," said Charlie.
